

Happy 1st Birthday, Beatrix!

*Please join us
to celebrate!*

Saturday, February 4

12:00 noon

64 Waldo St

Holyoke

Please let us know if you can make it!

There will be cake!

A photograph of a wall, possibly in a basement or utility room. The wall is light-colored and has a yellow rectangular sign mounted on it. The sign has the words 'MARTHA' and 'STEWART' in black capital letters. Above the sign, there are some pipes and a white object, possibly a light fixture or a piece of equipment. The lighting is dim, and the overall tone is somewhat dark.

MARTHA STEWART

The High Line was built by the New York Central Railroad between 1929 and 1934 to lift dangerous freight trains from Manhattan's streets. Originally extending down to the St. John's Park Terminal at Clarkson Street, the High Line was part of a much larger rail infrastructure project called the West Side Improvement, which eliminated street-level train crossings from Spuyten Duyvil to Lower Manhattan. The High Line's trains carried meat, produce, and dairy products into warehouses and factories at the third-floor level. It was known as the "Life Line of New York."

For many years, the High Line was a vital part of the busy manufacturing landscape of the industrial West Side. However, as trucking began to replace rail as the primary means of moving freight in New York City, train traffic declined on the High Line, and the southernmost section was torn down. By 1980, the trains had stopped running. What remained of the High Line, from Gansevoort Street to 34th Street, was slowly taken over by a self-sown landscape, showing the power of nature to conquer even monumental, man-made structures.

In 1999, with the High Line threatened with demolition, neighborhood residents Joshua David and Robert Hammond formed Friends of the High Line to advocate for the preservation and reuse of the structure. In 2002, through the leadership of Mayor Michael Bloomberg and the New York City Council, the City of New York boldly committed to transform the High Line into a one-of-a-kind park. Innovative design was central to the vision. The goal was to create a public landscape as unusual and unexpected as the High Line itself.

Tens of thousands of people have been part of the High Line's transformation. This park embodies their dedication to New York City and their desire to make something wonderful

For many years, the High Line was a vital part of the busy manufacturing landscape of the industrial West Side. However, as trucking began to replace rail as the primary means of moving freight in New York City, train traffic declined on the High Line and the southernmost section was torn down. By 1980, the train had stopped running. What remained of the High Line, from Gansevoort Street to 34th Street, was slowly taken over by a self-sown landscape, showing the power of nature to conquer even monumental, man-made structures.

In 1999, with the High Line threatened with demolition, neighborhood residents Joshua David and Robert Hammond formed Friends of the High Line to advocate for the preservation and reuse of the structure. In 2002, through the leadership of Mayor Michael Bloomberg and the New York City Council, the City of New York boldly committed to transform the High Line into a park. Innovative design was central to the vision.

If You Give a Pig a Pancake

HarperCollins

If You Give a Pig a Party

HarperCollins

Willem's

An ELEPHANT & PIGGIE Book

HAPPY PIG DAY!

Falconer

0-1-A

THE THREE LITTLE WOLVES AND THE BIG BAD PIG

Jones • Staake

PIGS ROCK!

Piggies' Guide to Life

PIC

HAPPY

PIC!

Aa

Dd

Gg

Hh

Kk

H

Mm

Nn

Oo

Rr

Ss

Tt

Vv

Ww

Xx

Yy

Zz

ELLA

Apple mint

Apple mint

Green

Orange

Lemon

Orange

Green Lemon

ZAGAT RATED
"THE BEST PASTRAMI ANYWHERE"

AND MORE .....

DON'T HONK

$350
PENALTY

ONE WAY

ONE WAY

E 78

DON'T HONK

$350
PENALTY

ZAGAT RATED

"THE BEST PASTRAMI ANYWHERE"

CORNERED BEEF, BRISKET,

AND MORE ....

STC HANO CENTRAL MARKET - NY
BABY BANANAS
PRODUCE OF COLOMBIA
MAR 21
MAR 26
202164 622113
NET WT 0.03 lb
PRICE/LB $3.99
TOTAL $1.19

STC HANO CENTRAL MARKET - NY
KUMQUATS
PRODUCE OF U.S.A.
MAR 20
2022118642
NET WT 0.02 lb
PRICE/LB $3.99
TOTAL $0.79

STC HANO CENTRAL MARKET - NY
LADY APPLES
PRODUCE OF U.S.A.
MAR 19
MAR 26
200351 223810
NET WT 0.03 lb
PRICE/LB $3.99
TOTAL $1.19

STC HANO CENTRAL MARKET - NY
LADY APPLES
PRODUCE OF U.S.A.
MAR 19
MAR 26
200351 014279
NET WT 0.03 lb
PRICE/LB $3.99
TOTAL $1.19

